Temptation also comes in many forms from even more sources. Possibly the most prevalent, but also least recognised, source could be advertising. Advertisements are designed to tempt you to buy; but even more, they aim to convince you that you are missing out if you do not have their product or service. It taps into our needs/wants dilemma; where a need is something most people have and cannot manage life without, whereas a want is more likely something others do not have; wanting to be ‘better than’, not merely ‘keeping up with the Jones’. Self-control is exactly what it says, controlling one’s self. How well do we each do that?
